BOMB-DROPPING

(BY CAPT. PAUL BEWSHER,
With the Rspath Chautauqua.)

BOMB-DROPPING is a branch of aerial warfare about which comparatively little is known by the civilian.

In the early days of the war bombs were dropped overboard by hand, but this plan later was discarded as the weight of the bombs increased, and there arose the need for releasing them easily while the bomb-dropper was scrutinizing his target.

Bombing machines now carry sixteen bombs, weighing one hundredweight each—as heavy, very often, as the man who drops them.

The bomb-dropper is sometimes eight or more feet from his bombs, which he often never sees. He kneels on his small "cockpit" on the extreme nose of the machine, a "short sight" in front of him—a wooden lever at his side. With that wooden lever he can release his three-quarters of a ton of bombs in two seconds if he wishes it, or he can drop them slowly, one by one, across the factory or aerodrome he wishes to bombard. It will be seen that, with his faculties absorbed in obtaining the exact range with the bomb sight, and in steering the pilot to the right or left with his hand in order to cross exactly over the objective, the actual releasing of the bombs must be as simple and as easy as possible.

Bombs are usually dropped in a line, one after another, so as to insure a great proportion falling upon the objective. If all are released at once there is a danger that they all may fall slightly short of, or beyond, the objective. On moonlight nights the visibility is so good that not only can the bomber see the flash of his bursting bombs, but can distinctly see afterwards the cloud of smoke caused by each, and so can check his results.

Bombs can, if necessary, be dropped "safe" so that they will not explode even if they strike the ground with great force. This is generally caused by a steel pin which has to be drawn out before the bomb becomes "live." Many bombs still containing the pin have been dropped in England by German men who have been captured. This has probably been caused by the nervousness and fear of the air man, who in his anxiety to get rid of his load as quickly as possible, and to leave the danger zone, has forgotten the small but most important operation.

"Aerial torpedoes" are not used. The German bombs, being fish-shaped and in some instances very long, have the appearance of torpedoes. Thus have risen the legends of the "torpedo" being fired into one part of London while the machine is over another.

This is not so; these bombs are dropped in the same way as the others. Various fuses are fitted on bombs for different uses. If they are intended to kill men, an instantaneous fuse is used so that the bomb explodes immediately on touching the ground, and the splinters scatter over a wide area, like shrapnel.

If they are intended to damage buildings a "delay fuse" is fitted so that the bomb explodes a certain fraction of a second after the impact. This allows the bomb to penetrate the building before bursting, and so the destruction is much greater.

Similarly, delay fuses are used for dropping on submarines, for even if the submarine itself is not struck the enormous displacement of the water may so cave it in, or jar its plates so much that they let in water and cause it to sink.

Special for Saturday only, 5 lbs. or more of side pork, 23c. H. A. Krauss.
